Please note that they will need to select one and only one of these options when they apply for their California credential, and once their California credential is issued, they may not switch to another specialty area. *An out-of-state Instructional Reading Specialist Certification is not transferable for any initial California certification. California has a Reading and Literacy Leadership Specialist Credential (please see the section For Specialists Prepared Outside of California on this page), but in order to apply for it on the basis of holding a comparable out-of-state credential, they also need a prerequisite California teaching credential (see #1 in the same section). In other words, they have to already have a California teaching credential before they can apply to transfer their out-of-state Instructional Reading Specialist Certification to California. Meaning that for educators who do not have another type of out-of-state teaching credential besides the Instructional Reading Specialist Certification that they can transfer to California to serve as their prerequisite California teaching credential, they are not able to transfer their Instructional Reading Specialist Certification. They'll have to earn a prerequisite California teaching credential some other way before they can apply to transfer their Instructional Reading Specialist Certification to California. *Yes indicates IU program is equivalent to state program

Yes indicates IU's program meets State requirements as long as candidate fulfills other post-curricular requirements (see "Notes" section)

No indicates IU's program does not match state program or that state has no corresponding certification band.

*Please note: Seeing "No" above does not mean you are ineligible to apply for certification out of state. Rather, it indicates that the state does not offer an identical certification type or grade band. We encourage you to use the link provided in the Notes section to review that state's certification requirements. It is strongly recommended that you first apply for Pennsylvania certification, since you completed an educator preparation program in PA. This will help streamline the process when applying for certification in another state.
